FELLOWSHIP

The better part of one's life consists of his friendships — Lincoln

May the 1959 Keystone reflect the good fellowship that has been the prevailing spirit of the academic and physical activities of Crosby High School.

THE SENIOR CLASS
CROSBY HIGH SCHOOL

WELCOME

We are proud to welcome to Crosby High School, our principal, Mr. J. Douglas Thompson. Although he came to us only this year, none of us will ever forget his sincere interest in us, both as a class and individually, or the untiring effort he has shown.

IN APPRECIATION

We wish to express our appreciation for all Mr. Weymouth, Jr., has done to promote dramatics and speech at Crosby High School. Those of us who have participated in the activities connected with dramatics know that it helps one develop poise and confidence, thus enabling us to cope with life's new encounters.

THANK YOU

Our deepest thanks to Mrs. Boynton for all the help she has given us this year with the Keystone. She has given unselfishly of her time and energy to assist us with the many problems we have encountered. Even though this was her first experience in this capacity, we feel that she has done a superb job. Thanks again, Mrs. Boynton!

DEDICATION

We, the Class of 1959, dedicate our Keystone to you, Coach Brown. Having been together for six years, we feel we have reached our milestone together. You began your teaching career with our class; and we are ending our high school days with you as our coach, confidant, and friend. We feel that Crosby, as well as the Class of 1959, has benefited greatly from your unceasing efforts and leadership.

FELLOWSHIP

In a short time, we, the class of 1959, like many classes before us and many more to come, will have to pursue a new life and enter into a difficult and more demanding world. We are about to assume heavier responsibilities than ever before. Are we prepared? Crosby High School has given us our preparation, and fellowship has been an important part of this preparation. This preparation is like a pyramid, with fellowship as one of the many building stones that will decide the outcome of our future whether it is formed unstably or will continue upward toward success.

Where is this essential element, fellowship, found? Everywhere! But you and you alone can find it for yourself. You cannot buy it, nor can you sell it.

Fellowship in our school lives in the assorted clubs and organizations. This is one of the reasons the underclassmen are urged to join these organizations. Fellowship is especially prevalent in the physical sports such as: football, basketball, and baseball. For without it, a team is no longer a team; and a game is no longer a game. If any of the football players were asked if it were really worth the rough treatment they undergo, they would probably say indirectly that it is not risk that they recognize; it is the fun, sportsmanship, and fellowship that they derive from each game.

Fellowship is found not only in extra-curricular activities but in academic studies as well. In literature some of us have been able to form an indescribable bond with an author through his writings or in history class to relive great moments and thrilling experiences with a noble or great person through his triumphs. Through our studies we have been able to learn more about ourselves and other people. Our studies have given each of us something in common and something to share. This is the beginning of fellowship!

Again I ask, are we prepared to take our place in the world? If achievement has been in only one of these two forms of fellowship, the base stone of the pyramid is weak! With patience and work, we will be able to stabilize our pyramid later in life. Of course, the ideal stone is formed of both forms of fellowship. Thus it is molded from a rich and strong material.

Though fellowship is but one stone in the tremendous pyramid to success, it is as important as the rest for each stone depends upon another.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF YOUTH

We, the youth of today, are faced with a great many responsibilities. We are indebted to our families, our communities, and God. Each of these debts must be paid in full. This takes a lifetime, but as teenagers we can make a good start.

We can start by paying off our debts to our families. This is not difficult, but it is very important. For the past eighteen or nineteen years we have been protected from the cruelties of the world by our parents. They have asked for nothing but obedience and understanding. Most of us have failed along these lines at one time or another, but now we realize how wrong we were, and if we don't we will some day. They have loved us even when we were not beyond reproach. They haven't always understood us, but that wasn't their fault. Even when, in the process of growing up, we rejected them and their advice, they have been patient and continued to love us. We can show our appreciation by doing the best we can to uphold their teachings, by doing the best we are capable of scholastically, and by keeping in mind for the rest of our lives the things we were taught by them. In this way we will be showing love, respect, and appreciation to our parents.

Our responsibility to the community is great. The debt is not so large, but it is difficult to pay. As teenagers we are looked up to by those younger than we and watched anxiously by those older. We can set an example, either good or bad, for the younger ones. We can show the older ones that their conception of the teenage group is right or wrong. How easy it would be to assume an "I don't care" attitude about the matter. We can't do that, though. In our hands we have the power to show the younger ones the right way to go. We have an opportunity to show our elders that we are capable of assuming our positions in the world as conscientious, reliable citizens. We must do our very best, or the preceding generation won't trust us enough to leave the world in our hands. The young people will become confused if our standards are not upheld. This is a great responsibility, and it certainly is a large order to fill; but we can do it if we really try.

Our responsibility to God is clearly outlined. The best way to meet it is to live by His word, to retain our faith, and really to appreciate the most precious gift we were ever given — life.

SENIOR CLASS

We, the class of 1959, can look back on a memorable year. In September we elected our class officers. Herman Barr, represented us on the Student Council as well as the Council officers.

This year proved to be the busiest of our high school career. Many participated in athletics, dramatics, music, and numerous committees. Work on the Keystone was an exciting and challenging job. Instead of a class trip this year, we voted to put our money toward graduation expenses.

Our last week came — with a mixture of joy and sorrow, we went through Baccalaureate, Class Day, Graduation, and the Senior Ball. Although we shall miss being a part of Crosby, our graduation is the climax of four very special years.

In April, 1958, the Crosby Footlights Club sent a one-act play to the state finals at Bowdoin for the second time in the past four years. "Special Guest" was Crosby's presentation in the one-act play contest. In the cast were Richard Rumney, Ronnie Brown, Linda McCarthy, Gary Walker, and Cynthia Eaton. During the four times "Special Guest" was played, each person in the cast received praise for outstanding characterization.

"In Spring the Sap," a three-act farce, by Guernsey LePelley was selected as the Footlights Club production for the fall. It had the largest cast to appear in a Crosby play for many years with over fifty people appearing on stage. The play presented excellent opportunity for characterization. Among the many excellent bits of acting, we cannot forget the outstanding naturalness of Judy Clements in the part of Mrs. Mince. With the help of the fine makeup job of Wendell Woodbury, David Estey played the old inventor J. Oliver Twibbly with the ability of a professional actor. Nor can we forget Robert Dutton's brief appearance as Henry Graves, the undertaker. It would be hard to single out any one actor as outstanding, for all presented their characterizations in a commendable manner.

A major project of the Footlights Club this year was the State High School Drama Conference held January 24. Fifteen schools were represented in the all day affair which included general meetings, discussion groups, a luncheon speaker and entertainment. The purpose of the conference which was held by the Footlights Club on a smaller scale last year was to discuss problems in play production, exchange ideas, and promote greater emphasis on dramatics throughout the state.

For its One-Act Play Night, the Footlights Club produced three fine shows: "Through a Glass Darkly," "Make Room for Rodney," and "Minor Miracle." "Minor Miracle" won and represented Crosby in the sectional contest. As the KEYSTONE goes to press, we wish the cast luck in the regional contest at Waterville.

The Student Council was very active this year. At the regular meetings every two weeks, many student "gripes" were discussed and satisfactory solutions were reached.

Delegates attending the state and regional conventions not only learned and exchanged ideas with other schools but also had a good time. During the Christmas holiday, a festive mood was set because of the efforts of the Student Council. Through the Student Council, steps were taken to keep the corridors free from candy wrappers and other bits of paper. The bulletin board was painted a lighter color, a light was placed above it and the material was regularly changed by a council member.

SENIOR MAGAZINE CAPTAINS

The success of our magazine drive this year should not be measured by the number of magazine subscriptions sold, or by the financial aid it brought to the school, but by the co-operation of the school leaders with Mr. Peterson and by all those salesmen who benefited through participation. For certainly school spirit was injected into this year's magazine drive by all classes.

LITERARY

THE BALLAD OF BERNARD GOLDFINE

Oh, Bernard J. Goldfine
Had rich dividends,
And he wanted to share them
With each of his friends.

He had heard that by giving
He'd surely be blessed,
And he wanted all governors
Rated well-dressed.

So he passed out vicuna cloth,
Overcoats, and loans;
And he paid off the mortgage
On many fine homes.

He laid down fine carpets
In a Washington hall,
And nothing expected—
No, nothing at all.

But the axiom proved
Not quite just as expected.
The ones who received
Were not blessed but rejected.

They were called on the carpet,
And questioned for days.
The reporters wrote chapters
That surely weren't praise.

Maine's Senator Paine
Didn't get re-elected,
And it's rumored Sherm Adams
Is feeling dejected.

No more can poor Bernie
Earn blessings from fate
Bestowing great bounties
At the old generous rate.

Tho' he still is fair-hearted
These days he can't catch
A man who'll say, "Yes,"
If he offers a Match.

THE VALUE OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

As a teenager there are many things which I value. But the thing I value the most is being an American citizen and the privileges which this citizenship offers me.

Here, in the United States, most people take these privileges for granted.
Because I am of the Jewish faith, I have been made aware of the centuries of persecution which most religious minority groups have endured.
This persecution was caused by men, who in their reach for power, would stop at nothing to gain their objective.

Members of my family have escaped from Europe with unbelievable stories of torture and mass murder. They have truly experienced man's inhumanity to man. These people have come to this country and have been given the opportunity to start their lives over again.

Because of this first hand account,
I truly value the freedom of speech and the right to worship as I see fit. I appreciate the opportunity of being able to choose the occupation of my liking.

I wish that many of my friends had had the opportunity to talk to some of the European refugees as I have.
Then they would appreciate much more the opportunities and freedom offered them in the United States.

Epistle I, II. 149-150

THE LORD GIVETH AND THE LORD TAKETH AWAY

The kitchen was filled with mingled odors of roasted chicken, mince meat pie, pipe tobacco, and a wood stove. Beside an old cast iron stove, big Jim McNeil relaxed with his favorite pipe as he listened to the popping and crackling of the fire. Dishes clattered and tinkled as his young wife Mary busily washed the dinner dishes. In an adjoining room a chubby blue-eyed boy with sandy hair sat peeping out through the rungs of his crib. Mary had been told after the boy's birth that she would have no more children; so she had named her son after his father. James Patrick McNeil, Jr., was the pride of the family, and his parents cherished him lovingly. At that moment, little Jimmy seemed to be uninterested in the toys that his father had recently bought him. The home-made truck with wheels that turned, the wooden cowboy pistol, and the little red tractor all lay motionless on the worn linoleum.

Jim put out his pipe and slapped it against the palm of his hand a few times to shake the burned Half and Half from the bowl. There was always work to do on the farm; and at that time, since he had neglected to do so earlier, Jim had to clean the horses' stall. He pulled his big leather boots over his heavy wool stockings. When he stood up, his head nearly touched the low ceiling. He put on a heavy cap and a coat; then he went out.

Nearly two feet of glistening snow covered the whole outdoors. Although water dripped from the icicles that were hanging from the roofs, Jim could clearly see his breath. He paused for a few moments to admire the usually unnoticed beauty of his little ten-acre farm.

A narrow dirt road, which was seldom used, wound lazily around the hilly terrain. Across the road from the house, bushy snow-covered evergreens served to introduce a healthy forest. Behind an old gray barn was a pasture, through which a crooked little brook trickled beneath a layer of ice and snow. At one end of the pasture, a lonely apple tree stood half surrounded by a few crabapple trees with bare and straggling limbs. Adjacent to the pasture were three unequal and uneven fields, in which peas, grain, and potatoes were planted annually. A big maple tree stood amidst a growth of burdock bushes near the barbed wire fence that surrounded the pasture. A path from the house to the barn had been shoveled since the last snowfall. With an admiring glance at the scenery, Jim started up the path to the barn.

Having been out in the glaring snow, he couldn't see a thing when he first entered the barn; however, he heard a welcoming bellow from Bertha, his only cow. With squeels, grunts, and various other unidentified noises, the three pigs made their presence known. His eyes had become adjusted to the limited light in the barn by this time, and Jim opened the door of the two horses' stall. As soon as he had opened the back door, the huge brown animals clumped out into the soft snow. Once outside, they playfully rolled over and over in the refreshing whiteness. Jim watched them for a few moments, then shut the door and went to work.

As he worked, Jim daydreamed. He thought about cutting down the burdock bushes so that little Jimmy could have a swing on the maple tree. Jim had hopes of building a wagon for his four-year-old son. What a happy day it would be when father and son could go fishing and hunting side by side! Jim was proud of his family and his farm. Although he was far from being the richest man in the world, he wasn't far from being the happiest.

As soon as the stall was covered with fresh straw and the horses were once again in the barn, Jim started toward the house. It was getting colder, and he pushed his hands deep into his coat pockets to keep them warm. The icicles were no longer melting. They had taken definite sizes and shapes for the night.

The sun was low, and it casually pinked the western sky. The snow on the ground also had a pinkish tint where the sun was shining on it. The shadows were long and purple. Jim reached the tiny porch, swept the snow off his boots with a broom, and hurried inside.

Once inside, he held his hands over the stove and rubbed them together to speed circulation. With his mind set on having another delicious piece of Mary's mince pie, he called, "Mary, when are we going to have supper?"

"Jim, come here," came an unexpected answer from the bedroom.

Without taking off his cap and coat, Jim went in. He found little Jimmy asleep; and Mary, with a worried look on her face, was sitting on the foot of the bed.

"Jim, he's sick," she said as she looked at the baby's hot red cheeks.

"When he wakes up, give him some hot lemonade and rub him down with Vicks," advised her husband.

"This isn't just a cold," she replied. "He's got a temperature of 103°."

Jim began to look worried. He didn't know exactly what a temperature of 103° meant, but he knew that it wasn't healthy. "Do you think we ought to take him to town?" he asked after a moment.

"Do you think you can get the truck going?" she asked.

"I hope so," he said as he hurried out to the kitchen. Before going outdoors this time, he put a pair of gloves on his hands.

The old Ford had been built in 1938 and had probably seen its better years, but it was still in fair condition. It hadn't been used since the last snow storm, and it was well covered with snow. Jim used a broom to sweep the loose snow off the cab. After removing most of the snow and standing the broom in a nearby banking, he opened the door and jumped in on icy seat covers.

Since the last few nights had been warm, the old truck started after a few whirrs and some coughing and sputtering. Luckily, the truck had a good heater; and the cab was soon nice and warm. By that time, Mary was ready and had dressed the boy in warm winter clothes. After Jim had driven the Ford up to the door, Mary and little Jimmy got in. Without further hesitation, the truck clattered down the lonely unplowed road. After a few minutes, the white exhaust was out of sight; and everything was silent.

Hours later, two dim headlights led the truck back up the road toward the little farm. The clattering and sputtering of the old engine shattered the tranquility of the lovely winter scene as the truck turned into the driveway. After the truck had stopped, Mary got out and started toward the house. With a few more roars of the motor, Jim turned off the ignition switch and followed his wife. Without saying a word, they both went slowly into the house.

After a few minutes, Jim came outside with a milk pail in his hand and started up the path leading to the barn. The night was quiet except for the crunching of snow beneath his feet as he walked. When he had reached the barn, he stopped and once more turned to view the peaceful landscape.

The farm looked like some of the scenes that are seen on Christmas cards. The white smoke from the chim-

COLLEGE BOUND

My sister's off to college
With all the car could hold.
She's taken everything she owns,
Junk — both new and old.

All my records are missing;
I've hunted high and low.
She took my Presley album,
Even my Hi-Fi radio.

She swiped my father's car keys
And my mother's newest dress.
She did leave me her room though.
But oh, what a mess!

She's said good-by to all the gang
To her their friendship clings;
She's said good-by to all her boys
And returned all their class rings.

As we left her at the campus,
I could see Mom's tear-filled eyes.
They lingered on; endlessly,
Exchanging last good-bys.

Oh, where will Susie ever find
Any room for knowledge,
After she has filled her room
With all she took to college?

THE BALLAD OF JACKIE DARIN'

Jackie Darin' was a sailor;
He sailed from here to there.
But of all, his most famous trip
Was to the isle of Gilatare.

Now on the isle of Gilatare,
Lived a fierce old bunny rabbit.
"Fight me, my friend," Jackie roared,
"And a grave you'll soon inhabit."

But Jackie had misjudged
The rabbit, and the strength of it.
It took poor Jack down to the shore
And threw him the length of it.

Up jumped Jackie, frothing with rage;
Out came his gleaming knife.
Thunder rolled and lightning flashed,
And the sailor ran for his life.

THE BALLAD OF JACKIE DARIN' (Continued)

For out of the jungle came rabbits
Rabbits, rabbits, and rabbits, and more.
Poor Jackie cleared the pier in one long jump
And struck out for the opposite shore.

CRAM SESSION

"Yes, I am sure that today is the day. Why couldn't he be like other teachers and tell us a week ahead about his tests? He probably knows that I never do anything. Maybe that's why he's giving a surprise test, to catch me! You can tell by looking into his beady little eyes that he has a mean streak. I always wondered why they let such people into a school-house. Look at the way he walks up and down. He's probably deciding which ones to flunk. There I knew it. Get a load of that sarcastic tone. "Just a little quiz over recent work," he says. All the time he knows that it would take a week to do what he gives us just one night to study. Thank goodness for bells, I couldn't have stood this place another minute."

"Gee, it's kind of chilly up here tonight. I'll put on my new sweater . . . There, this is real cozy. Oh, those stupid kids! I think that they only practice on that piano because they know that I am trying to study. How is anyone supposed to concentrate on "Macbeth" under these conditions? I must know all of this stuff anyhow; we've been going over it in class for weeks. . . Maybe we will get an easy test. I wonder what's on the radio tonight. . . It's only 11 o'clock but I think I'll go to bed, seeing's I have been studying so hard!"

"What a way to start the morning!
I'd laugh if there weren't enough tests

TO BEOWULF

These banquets are so boring; really, it's quite revolting! All the Danish warriors are proposing toasts to Beowulf to honor his strength and courage. (Actually there is so much noise, I wonder if he realizes that he is receiving so much attention.) Beowulf, the braggart, has told so many stories of his heroic episodes that I groan whenever he staggers to his feet. I do hope he regains control of himself and slays Grendel; it would be such a load off Hrothgar's shoulders.

OUR HERO

I had been following Grendel's trail for about four days when I finally caught up with him in a cave. Although I walked into the cave cautiously, Grendel jumped me. It was a terrible fight! Anything I did had no effect on Grendel. But finally, as Grendel had me cornered and was coming in for the "kill," I whipped out my trusty slingshot and let fly a stone at his head. It struck him squarely between the eyes, and he fell dead on the floor of the cave. I lived happily ever after with Grendel's mother.

Freshman: "No, I don't believe you would."

THE BROOK

Beneath the over-fragrant pines
And out across the green,
Dipping among the twisted vines,
Bubbles a sparkling stream.

'Twas there beside the tiny brooklet
I paused to rest awhile
And saw the first spring violet
Look up at me and smile.

CONFORMITY

Little brook, have you forgotten
That pale light on spring morns
Once streaked across the sky
And warmed our backs,
Yours and mine?

This winter morning grey and cold
Grasps my heart with icy fingers,
And holds you prisoner beneath its crusty cloak.

I am restless in my dungeon
As you beneath your wall of ice.
Oh! That some warm breeze
Might free us,
You and I

Unwilling slaves of this harsh master.

THE 23rd PSALM

Mrs. Ellis is my teacher, I shall not pass.

She maketh me to take long tests in English class

She restoreth my sorrow; she causeth me

To learn words for my vocabulary sake.
Yea, though I study until midnight I Shall gain no knowledge for the rules
They so annoyeth me. She prepareth A Test for me in the presence of my Classmates; the pages runneth over.
Surely, sadness and mercy shall follow
Me all the days of my life, and poor me
I shall dwell in English class Forever.

ney spiraled upward and drifted lazily into the darkness of the sky. Stars twinkled like tiny diamonds resting on a black velvet cushion. The snowy countryside looked like a blanket of huge clouds that had become heavy and had fallen. What a beautiful night! As Jim saw these things of beauty, tears began to trickle down his cold cheeks. Looking once more at the lonely heavens, he said softly, "Good-bye, Jimmy," and went into the barn.

GIRL'S BASKETBALL

Thus far this year the Crosby Lionettes have not had a too successful year. This year's season started on November 26, under the coaching of Elaine Bailey. The team consisted of eight juniors, eight sophomores, and one freshman. Paulette Dean and Patricia Black, as managers, did a fine job of managing the team.

The Crosby Lionettes are very proud of their victory over Rockland on January 21. They won by a score of 44 to 39. This was the first defeat for Rockland in three years. Although no other victory has been at hand, as of yet, they feel that 'defeating Rockland was well worth waiting for.

Even though the team was not successful, the girls learned the value of teamwork and sportsmanship. The team, as a whole, fought hard and showed keen sportsmanship throughout the season.

FOOTBALL—1958

In 1958 the Crosby Lions stepped out of the Little Eight Conference and set their sights on a bigger game. The competition proved a little too much for the Lions as shown by their 3-5 record. But, the Lions did have some moments of greatness as we will see as we review the season.

A crowd of about 2,000 people gathered at Doyle Field, Brewer, to see the Crosby Lions do battle with the John Bapst Crusaders. The much bigger Crusaders romped to a 32-0 halftime lead. The Lions after spotting Bapst another touchdown early in the third period, came to life and scored three touchdowns late in the game. The final score was John Bapst 39, Crosby 19.

Next, the highly rated Golden Bucks of Bucksport invaded the Lion's den. This game was one of the most spectacular football games ever played in Belfast. This was a real offensive show. The two teams battled to a 33-33 tie with 56 seconds remaining when Teddy Heroux took a handoff and sped 80 yards to win it for Crosby 40-37.

The Lions third encounter was with Higgins Classical Institute at Charleston. The Lions started fast and hung on to win 21-14.

Crosby's next game was with a tough Fairfield team. In the game played in rain and mud, the Bulldogs of Fairfield trampled the Lions 47-0.

In the fifth encounter of the season the Lions played their traditional rivals, the Rockland Tigers. After the dust had settled, Rockland had edged out a 25-20 win in a hard fought game.

The Lions next game was with Ellsworth. Crosby started fast and at half-time the score was 34-7, in Crosby's favor; but Ellsworth came back strong in the second half. Crosby hung on to win 34-26.

Crosby's next encounter was with a vastly improved Madison eleven. The Lions played well and did a good job of stopping the Madison ground attack, but they couldn't halt the passing game. Madison took the game 20-0.

The Lion's last game was against Old Town. This was a game played in the mud and Old Town out powered the Lions 32-0.

Although the season was not successful, special praise should go to the coaches, Win Brown and Ron LeClair, for turning out this team and building for the future.
